HISTORY

Turf Cocktail

There are several variations on the Turf Cocktail, each a slight riff on the traditional Martini. The earliest of these recipes can be traced to George J. Kappeler's 'Modern American Drinks' from 1895, and is a simple mix of gin and bitters. Harry MacElhone's version from 1922 was crafted with gin, maraschino, bitters and absinthe.

Hemingway Daiquiri

Ernest Hemingway was the inspiration for the Hemingway Daiquiri, not the author. It was created at the El Floridita Bar in Havana Cuba. Hemingway's request for double the booze and half the sugar for his drinks made for an unbalanced cocktail. One of the bartenders couldn't help but to fix his recipe with the addition of Maraschino liqueur and grapefruit Juice. Legend has it that he loved it so much he always ordered a double, lending the cocktail its nickname of Papa Doble.

Burnt Fuselage

Some drinks have tragically unfortunate names! The Burnt Fuselage falls in to this category. The image of a flaming airplane plummeting to the earth may not be something you want to summon when you are picking a cocktail! Back in 1927, when this recipe first appeared in a slim bar guide called Barflies and Cocktails, The Burnt Fuselage was considered a 'stiff steadier' for early aviator Chuck Kerwood. With a dose of cognac, smoothed out with Grand Manier, and the sweet edge taken off by adding dry vermouth, the Burnt Fuselage is pleasantly silky and fortifying--and as the book notes, after working through one of these 'your own fuselage will be warm, to say the least'

Penicillin

Created by bartender Sam Ross in 2005 at the famed cocktail bar Milk and Honey. This heady concoction of scotch, honey-ginger syrup and fresh lemon juice is something of a cure all - hence the name. Like a deliciously smokey, chilled version of a toddy, the drink delivers an assertive whiff of peat and brine - thanks to a floater of Islay Scotch - that gradually gives way to something more subtle and sweet.

Naked and Famous

Joaquin Simo originally created this variation while working at the New York speakeasy Death and Co. Joaquin describes it as "the bastard child born out of an illicit Oaxacan love affair between the Last Word Cocktail and the Paper Plane cocktail. It is smokey, sweet, and tart all in one.
